History of George Mason Baseball

In the spring of 1968 at then George Mason College, the baseball team threw out its first pitch. In the 34 years since then, and just three head coaches later, the baseball program is one of the finest and most successful in George Mason University athletics.

The Patriot baseball program has accomplished much throughout its history, posting 23 winning seasons in its 35-year existence. George Mason's overall record is 922-745-9, with a winning percentage of .553, and the Patriots have posted at least 30 victories in a season eight times in the last 18 years. At their 900-seat on-campus stadium, Raymond H. "Hap" Spuhler Field, they have a mark of 268-140-3 (.656) since its inaugural season in 1986.

"Hap" Spuhler, the "Father of George Mason Baseball" and the team's first head coach, led the Patriots through a respectable 8-12 first season in 1968. It marked the only losing season in his 12 years as head coach, and under his guidance, Mason posted five seasons with 30 or more victories, including four straight from 1973-76.

In the seven years the team competed in the Potomac Intercollegiate Conference, Spuhler led the Patriots to six regular season and postseason tournament championships. As part of the Mason-Dixon Intercollegiate Athletic Conference, Spuhler's teams won two MDIAC Southern Division titles and a pair of league regular season crowns. George Mason made three consecutive appearances in the NAIA playoffs, advancing to the NAIA World Series in 1976 as the Patriots won 42 games (still a school record) and finished fifth in St. Joseph, MO.

The program's early success can be attributed to Spuhler's determination as a coach and to some fine players. Early Patriot stars include Gary Roth, Joe Anderson and Tim Prime, each of whom has been inducted into the George Mason Athletic Hall of Fame. Roth excelled as a pitcher and outfielder, while Anderson was a four-year standout in the outfield and Prime was an infielder who led the Patriots to the NAIA World Series in 1976. Roth (24), Anderson (4) and Spuhler (41) also have had their numbers retired by the program.

After 12 seasons under Spuhler, who compiled a career record of 318-169-3 (.652 winning percentage), George Mason baseball entered the NCAA Division I ranks in 1980 with its second head coach, former major league pitcher Walt Masterson. The Patriots worked to adjust to the tougher competition and Masterson retired two seasons later, finishing his stint in Fairfax with an overall record of 33-43-1 (.435).

The coaching reins naturally fell to Bill Brown, a former Patriot player and assistant coach under Masterson. Brown played for Spuhler and Masterson for two seasons in 1978-

79, and he was selected as the NAIA All-District 19 catcher during his junior year.

Brown has had outstanding success as a head coach, surpassing Spuhler in 1992 as George Mason's all-time leader in coaching victories. In his 21 seasons leading the Patriots, he has a career record of 571-533-5 (.517 winning percentage), and at age 45, he currently ranks as the third-youngest coach in the nation with 550 wins at the NCAA Division I level.

The conference-level success the Patriots experienced under Spuhler has continued under Brown's guidance. In 1985, Mason won the ECAC South Division championship with a 38-23 record as Brown earned the first of four Coach of the Year awards. First baseman Kevin Burke was named the ECAC South Division Player of the Year as the Patriots made their first trip to the NCAA Division I Tournament.

Since becoming a charter member of the Colonial Athletic Association in 1986, the Patriots have posed a constant threat to win a championship. Mason won the regular season title in the CAA in 1992 and 1993, and they captured the conference tournament title in 1988 and 1992. Brown has been honored as the CAA Coach of the Year three times (1987, 1992, 1993), and Mason has produced a pair of CAA Player of the Year honorees – outfielder Ryan Johnston in 1987 and first baseman Chris Burr in 1992.

George Mason has advanced to the NCAA Tournament four times, in 1985, 1988, 1992 and 1993. The Patriots won their first-ever NCAA Tournament game against Rider, 10-2, in Gainesville, FL, in 1992, and they earned their first at-large bid to the tournament in 1993. The teams that eliminated Mason from its last two postseason appearances (California in 1992, St. John's in 1993) finished those seasons ranked among the Top 15 in the nation.

Brown has coached each of the Patriot players who has received All-America recognition, and 19 of George Mason's 21 professional draft picks have come during this time. In addition, many other Mason players have signed with professional organizations as free agents.

The highest draft choice in Patriot baseball history is catcher Chris Widger, who was selected in the third round of the 1992 draft by the Seattle Mariners. Widger has played parts of seven seasons in the major leagues with Seattle (1995-96, 2000), the Montreal Expos (1997-2000) and the New York Yankees (2002), and he is one of three George Mason players to reach the majors. Pitcher Mike Draper was the first as he saw action with the New York Mets in 1993 before suffering an elbow injury, and outfielder Mike Colangelo has had stints with the Anaheim Angels (1999), San Diego Padres (2001) and Oakland Athletics (2002).

Patriots in the Pros

Over the past 25 years, the George Mason baseball program has seen a total of 21 players be drafted and signed by professional baseball teams. Nineteen have been selected since the Patriots moved to NCAA Division I status in 1980, with 17 having been chosen in the last 16 years.

More than one George Mason player has been taken in the same draft seven times over the years, and five of those occasions happened in the last 10 years. Three Patriots have been chosen in the same draft twice in that same span.

In 1993, Greg Deares was selected in the 26th round by the St. Louis Cardinals and Lonnie Goldberg was taken by the Texas Rangers in the 27th round, while junior catcher J.J. Picollo was selected in the 14th round by the Cincinnati Reds, but he decided to return to school for his senior season. In 1997, Shawn Camp was taken in the 16th round by the San Diego Padres, Mike Colangelo was selected in the 21st round by Anaheim and Chris Martine was chosen in the 23rd round by St. Louis.

The Rangers have come calling in Fairfax most often, selecting seven players. Stan Reese and Dave Miller were the first Patriot draftees by Texas in 1978, and they were followed by Mike Esser (1982), Luke Sable (1987), Chris Burr (1992), Goldberg (1993) and Joe Goodwin (1995).

The 21 draftees all figure prominently in the George Mason record books. Draper holds six single-season marks, while Goldberg is the career leader in eight categories. Ryan Johnston has the best career batting average, Kevin Burke leads all George Mason players in slugging percentage, and Colangelo holds the records for triples and on-base percentage. For a single season, Burke holds five records while Johnston owns two and Colangelo has the mark for on-base percentage.

In addition, several Patriots have been signed as free agents by major league organizations. Last June, Brian Anderson signed with the Montreal Expos.

Three former Patriots have reached the major leagues — Mike Draper, Chris Widger and Colangelo. Draper became the first when he spent the 1993 season with the New York Mets after being selected in the Rule 5 Draft from the New York Yankees, who had originally drafted him in 1988. He suffered an elbow injury late that season, which ended his big-league career.

Widger was a third-round choice (the highest a George Mason player has ever been taken) by the Seattle Mariners in 1992 and reached the majors with the Mariners in 1995. Traded to the Montreal Expos in November 1996, Widger was the starting catcher for the Expos for three seasons before being traded back to Seattle in August 2000. He missed all of 2001 with a shoulder injury.

Colangelo made his debut with the Anaheim Angels in June 1999, but was injured in his first game and missed the rest of the season. He spent all of 2000 on the disabled list with Anaheim, but he moved to the San Diego Padres in 2001 and batted .242 with three triples and eight RBI as he saw action in 50 major league games.

During 2002, eight former Patriots were active in professional baseball. Widger, who signed a minor league contract with the New York Yankees in February, started the year at Class AAA Columbus (OH) before being called up to the Bronx on June 30. He played in 21 games for the Yankees and batted .297 with five RBI as a reserve catcher.

Colangelo signed as a free agent with the Oakland Athletics early in 2002 and made the team out of spring training. He played in 20 games before being sent to Class AAA Sacramento (CA), where he finished the season.

Camp was traded from San Diego to the Pittsburgh Pirates organization in 2001, and he spent all of 2002 with Class AAA Nashville (TN). Mark Gibbs and Jordan, both signed as free agents by the Baltimore Orioles, are still active in that organization, as is Anderson with the Expos. Kevin Kawecki and Greg Filson played last season for Johnstown (PA) in the independent Frontier League.

“Hap” Spuhler

Raymond H. “Hap” Spuhler, the “Father of George Mason Baseball,” was a mentor and father-figure to a generation of Patriot players from 1968-79. It is only appropriate that the University’s baseball facility is named in his honor.

Spuhler began the George Mason baseball program in the spring of 1968 and quickly built it into one of the best in Area VIII of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA). In 1976, Spuhler guided George Mason to a school-record 42 victories and a berth in the NAIA World Series. He guided the Patriots to five seasons of 30 or more victories, including four straight from 1973-76, and also led George Mason to three consecutive appearances in the NAIA playoffs from 1975-77. In 12 seasons, Spuhler had a career record of 318-169-3 for a winning percentage of .652.

In addition to his duties as baseball coach, the native of Johnstown, PA, also served as George Mason’s first athletic director, spent three years as the men’s basketball coach, coached the cross country team and was an assistant professor of health education.

When Spuhler retired in 1979, the George Mason athletic program was preparing to enter NCAA Division I status on solid footing. In October 1982, Spuhler’s familiar No. 41 baseball jersey was retired as he was inducted into the George Mason Athletic Hall of Fame. He died Nov. 26, 1982, in Albuquerque, NM, after a long illness.

Gary Roth

Gary Roth was one of the George Mason baseball program’s first star players. A pitcher/outfielder, Roth excelled at both positions from 1970-73.

At the plate, the Falls Church, VA, native had a career .338 batting average with 23 doubles, 13 triples and 17 home runs, while on the mound, he had a career record of 33-15. As a freshman out of George C. Marshall High School in 1970, he was 9-3 with a 0.91 ERA and struck out 91 batters in 88 innings, an average of 9.3 per nine innings. His best year at the plate came in 1972 as he batted .359 with seven triples.

Roth’s jersey was retired in 1975 as he was inducted into the George Mason Athletic Hall of Fame.

Joe Anderson

Joe Anderson was another of the baseball pioneers at George Mason, picking up where Gary Roth left off. A four-year standout for the Patriots from 1972-75, Anderson was a two-time All-Mason-Dixon Conference selection as an outfielder in 1974-75.

A native of Falls Church, VA, and a graduate of Falls Church High School, Anderson was an outstanding offensive player and had a .344 career batting average. In 1974, he ranked sixth among NCAA Division II hitters with a .433 average and was seventh in the nation with six triples.

Anderson’s jersey was retired in 1975 as he was inducted into the George Mason Athletic Hall of Fame.

Tim Prime

Tim Prime was one of the top baseball players at George Mason from 1973-76.

A two-time All-Mason-Dixon Conference and All-NAIA District 19 third baseman, he posted career numbers of a .322 batting average, 16 doubles, eight triples, 15 home runs and 93 stolen bases. As a senior, he was the captain and most valuable player of the Patriot team that set a school record for wins with a 42-14 record and advanced to the NAIA World Series.

Prime was inducted into the George Mason Athletic Hall of Fame in 1976.
